

Ken Pierre Kleemann was born in 1983 in Halle/S. After living in the USA, completing his service for the German army in Bosnien-Herzegowina and being a primary teacher in India he started studying history of byzantine art/ christian archeology/ protestant theology in Halle/S. In 2006 he joined the new bachelor-programm at the University of Leipzig and studied social science with political science as centre. In 2009 he changed to a Master in philosophy specialised on history of political thought. In 2011 he started his research for obtaining a doctor-degree on positive philosophy. In course of his research he started an interdisciplinary approach with Prof. Hans-Gert Graebe and developed a research and educational curriculum for the Institute of Informatics about the social impacts of modern technology. Besides this he is active in local bodies, which are concerned about democratic structures and he works as an assistant and supervisor for local start-up-companies and music labels.